Faith & Devotion

The Exhibition which is the first of its kind in Brunei features over 20 orientalist paintings by renowned 19th Century artists which amongst others includes Jean-Leon-Gerome, Osman Hamdi Bey and Rudolf Ernst. In line with the theme Faith & Devotion, the paintings collectively explore depictions of the many parts of the Muslim world termed as 'the Orient' in the 19th century which were accessible to European visitors. The paintings shed an important light on Islamic culture and religion at a time when few photographic records survive.

The Orient, a term coined in the 19th century, was understood as a cultural and geographical concept defined by the largely Muslim countries and regions bordering the Mediterranean and further east, from Morocco in the west, to Anatolia and Constantinople in the north, to Egypt, the Levant, and India in the east. Since the first half of the nineteenth century, Western artists from Europe and America, but also painters in the Ottoman Empire (later Turkey) itself, have turned to these lands and cultures as a source of painterly inspiration and wonder, a phenomenon celebrated by the present collection.

Orientalist art can be seen as a celebration of Islamic culture as a sincere attempt to record, in a respectful and considered way, their impressions of a world beyond their own experience. Orientalist paintings shine an invaluable documentary light on their culture and religion at a time when local artists were not practicing figurative art where these artists traveled in search of new experiences and subjects to paint.
